FREW & CAMPBELL, PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS.

TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 13, 1879. The Wheeling Intelligencer and the Lot Baltimore Catholic Mirror

Two weeks ago we published an advertisement of a drawing of a lot and other goods, which will take place at Olathe, Kansas, on Monday next, and the proceeds of which are to be used for the erec tion of a church at that place.

tion is, that "Masses for the dead" are for the benefit of the purchasers. Surely great the in this, that the priest offered to pray for those who should help to build a church! Its second objection is, that lotteries are immoral. This is news for us. We know the laws of God and the laws of His immoral. This is news for us. We know the laws of God and the laws of His Church, but we have not met in them the commandment: "Thou shalt not take a chance in a lottery." We have read in the reports of the proceedings at Conferences of Protestant ministers that it had been decided that no man can be a Christian who uses tobacco, drinks whisky or goes to the theatre. Possibly the same legislators supplied the omission on the tablets of Moses concerning drawings.

Lotteries are prohibited in some States. But this does not make them immoral. Things that are evil in thehaselves, as murder, are sinful, whether or not the laws of the State forbid them. But things that are only male a prohibite, as, for instance, the catching of oysters in Maryland in the summer, may be done without sin. Sometimes a man is bound, under pain of sin, to violate the law, as the first Christians were when they were commanded to burn incense before idols. So that the fact that lotteries are prohibited by some governments is not proof that they are immoral. The Israelites divided the promised land by lot. The Apostles chose Matthias by lot. Other instances are in the Bible in which the lottery was used by the people of God. If it were immoral, He would not have permitted them to make use of it.

Now, lotteries may be dishonestly con-have permitted them to make use of it. Now, lotteries may be dishonestly con-ducted, as, indeed, we believe almost all ducted, as, indeed, we believe almost all public ones are; and persons may use, to buy tickets in them, money they should apply to the support of their tamilies or for some other obligation. In those cases, the managers and the purchasers sin, not because they have something to do with a lottery, but because they cheat, swindle, misappropriate funds—violate the seventh commandment.

But where a lottery is squarely managed, and for a good purpose, and where persons have the means to contribute to that object, know full well the number of prizes and blanks, and buy a ticket more to help on the good work than in a desire of gain —we see nothing immoral, but something highly commendable in their purchasing tickets. The road to Heaven is a narrow one

There are some Pharisees in this world who are so sure of their own ability to traverse it, that they want to see it less broad than God made it.

We publish above the Mirror's article in full, which is more than it does for us. We almost feel as the lawyers do when they sometimes submit their cases without argument to the jury, believing that the case so strong in itself as to need no argument. Not that the case is fully stated by the Mirror, folls but hat notwithstanding all the twisting which it receives at its hands its inherent force is not destroyed, nor indeed seriously impaired. With all respect for our cotemporary, if what it offers is the best that can be said for the Olathe lottery project, then does it rest upon flimsy foundations indeed for support. Our main objection to the lottery was that it is a violat ion of the law of the land (unless indeed the law of the land (unless indeed the law of the land (unless indeed the law of the land lans suppressed lotteries as a species of gambling that has been found to be highly demoralizing in its effects. The law of West Virginia is very stringent against such practices—so much so that we remarked that the morality of the law in this case seemed to rise above the morality of the Promised land by lot, and also the choosing of Matthias as an Apostle by such an ordeal. We are surprised at the Mirror for such an irreverent blending of things clean and unclean. If it will suppose the morality of the law in reference in the Mirror for such an irreverent blending of things clean and unclean. If it will suppose the morality of the law in the Mirror for such an irreverent blending of things clean and unclean. If it will suppose the morality of the law in the Mirror for such an irreverent blending of things clean and unclean. If it will suppose the morality of the law in the Mirror for such an irreverent blending of things clean and unclean. the Mirror for such an irreverent blending of things clean and unclean. If it will turn to the 1st chapter of the Acts of the Apostles it will see how solemn was the ordeal there instituted. As between the two candidates "they (the Apostles) prayed and said, thou Lord, which knowest two candidates "they (the Apostles) prayed and said, thou Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou has chosen." We presume that the man who gambles for monscrapes show the same of the same that the man who gambles for monscrapes show the same that the man who gambles for monscrapes show the same that the man who gambles for monscrapes show the same that the man who gambles for monscrapes show the same that the man who gambles for monscrapes show the same that the man who gambles for monscrapes show the same that the man who gambles for monscrapes show the same that sume that the man who gambles for money, or for a town lot in Olathe, does not as ciate the language in the case of Matthias with the merits of his case, nor the motive involved in the one instance with that of the other.

There are many cases in which the lot is resorted to, rightfully and lawfully, as in the case of drawing jurors, but it all rests upon the idea that the end in view is not unworthy of the ordeal, and it is an appeal, dervied from the English law, for help to arrive at a correct decision in favor of right between man and man.

We object to the Mirror mixing up re-ligion in this matter by talking about prayers for those who thus help build a church. The primary motive addressed is cupidity-a chance in the wheel for the town lot. The next inducement is a promise to say so many masses for the man who will risk his dollar. He is thus furnished with two strings to his bow. He is afforded a lot, possibly, and prayers, certainly, in re turn for the investiment in the wheel. Both the morality and theology of such an appealseem open to serious objections.

End of a Noted Medical Dispute.

At the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the New York State Homepathic Med-ical Society at Albany, in February, 1878, Dr. E. S. Fowler, of New York, presented the following resolution, which, then adopted, has ever since caused violent dissension in the homepathic profession:

sension in the homepathic profession:

That, in common with other existing associations which have for their object investigations and other labors which may contribute to the promotion of medical science, we hereby declare that although firmly believing the principle "similia similibus curantar" to constitute the best general guide in the selecting of remedies and fully intending to carry out this principle to the best of our ability, this belief does not debar us from recognizing and making use of the results of our experience, and we shall exercise and defend the inviolable right of every educated physician to make practical use of any established principle in medical science or any thera-

The Wheeling Intelligences finds fault up from the opposing factions, and the with this advertisement. Its first object body of delegates had small hopes of an amicable settlement. It has, however, ion is, that "Masses for the dead" are amicable settlement. It has, however, "offered for money as an inducement to take a chance in the turn of the wheel." There are two inaccuracies of statement in this objection—the Masses are not "for the dead," but for the benefit of the living, and they are not "offered for money," The tickets in the drawing are offered for money, and the rector promises, in addition, to say at least twenty-five Masses for the benefit of the purchasers. Surely expensive the view of the school," the strength of the precision of the precision of the precision of the product of the school of the precision of great therapeutic law for the treatment of It also states the following principles

EXPORTS FOR EUROPE.

Heavy Cargoes of Fresh Meat and Mis Goods, but Fewer Live Stock. lew York Bulletin of Monday.

There were five ocean steamers cleared from here on Saturday, carrying out heavy cargoes to various ports in Europe, and which, in the aggregate, swelled to proportions. The stowing capacities of all the vessels were fully tested and offers were made up to the latest moment of consign ments of provisions, merchandise, breadstuffs and other commodities which form the staple items on every freight list. The shipments of live stock were light, there being but 30 head of horned cattle and 64 horses in all, of which 27 horses were for parafine hands and feet.

When the principal Southern gentleman, especially those who took part in the rebellion, tell us voluntarily that they mean to defend the Union, its Constitution and the laws, we ought to believe them. If our Republican leaders wish to drive these Southerners back into secession and into hostility to the United States government, they take the best way of doing it, by refusingsto believe in their sincerity, and rejecting their offers of good-will. The worst enemies of the Union are such Republicans as these. If we should have a new rebellion, they would be largely responsible for it.

It is always a period of danger when the two great parties of the State have no legitimate work to do. Then those who want power and office are tempted to seek them by pandering to any popular prejudice. They are politicians out of business, looking about for a situation.

The same man, who, when the negroes were concerned, denounced the prejudice of race, stooped to concilitate it by voting to keep out the Chinese. This shows that they were politicians out of business, looking about for employment. It was a melancholy sight—Mr. Blaine going to Mr. Kearney to see if he could give him omployment.

peutical|facts founded on experience, so far as in his individual judgment they shall tend to promote the welfare of those, under his professional skill.

Soon afterward a meeting of the society was called in New York City for the matter consideration of the resolution, and after a very hot discussion, the action of the former meeting was reaffirmed, but by a majority of only one vote.

Warm discussions of the natter in and out of the newspapers followed, and the delegates to this year's meeting of the society looked forward to another acrimor nious debate. It was, however, voted to, refer the question of rescinding the resolution to a committee of five, of which John J. Mitchell, M. D., of Newburgh, was chairman.
